THE CHERRY TREE

A RECORD OF THE UNIVERSITY YEAR

PUBLISHED BY THE STUDENTS AT GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY
This volume of the yearly publication of the University makes its appearance with a new title, "THE CHERRY TREE." After the sale of the University property at the head of the Mall, whose location inspired the last name of the annual, "THE MALL" was deemed inappropriate as a title for the book, and on this account the Board of Editors selected the present title, suggested by Mr. Leon Lawrence Lewis, of the College of Political Sciences, as one more suggestive of the University, and more appropriate for a publication of this character.

This, as has been intimated above, inaugurates the third series of the University yearbook, the first having been published by the graduating class of Columbia College, from 1898 to 1904, under the name of "THE COLUMBIAD." Beginning with the number for 1905, and until this year, it has been called "THE MALL."

To make this volume a true and attractive record of all the happenings that make valuable to memory the retrospect of an University life has been the constant endeavor of the Board.
A university is a living, an organic thing. It is planted in faith and nourished by the hopes of those who look to the future. The little sapling may die before it ever puts down those roots which will draw from the soil the water and food which it needs for growth. It may be burned by summer sun and frozen by winter cold. It may be attacked by disease or eaten by insects. It may be cut down. Any tree planted by man’s hands lives precariously. Even though it grows from sapling to tree, it will always need nourishment if it is to live. The mortality rate of colleges in the early nineteenth century was very high. Columbian College in the District of Columbia lived to become George Washington University.

LUTHER RICE AND THE COLUMBIAN COLLEGE.

The founder, Luther Rice, with remarkable insight, was able to foresee the tree before the sapling had hardly taken root. He saw a university almost as soon as the College was started. What were the forces that conditioned the growth and development of the institution as it evolved from a small church-related liberal arts college to a large independent university? Of many, three might be singled out: the church, the city, and finances.

The fact that Columbian was a liberal arts college was itself somewhat a matter of evolution, not so easy to trace. For the predecessor of Columbian was the Theological Institution in Philadelphia, founded by the Baptist Convention, three years before the College was started.
BELLWETHER OF BAPTIST THEOLOGY.

The Reverend Doctor William Staughton, later to be the first president of Columbian, was chosen Principal and the Reverend Ira Chase professor of languages and biblical literature. Professor Chase, apparently the bellwether of Baptist theology, led his flock of students from Philadelphia to Washington in early September, 1821 and began lectures a few months before classes in the classical department began. In 1825 Professor Chase left Columbian to set up a course of study in the newly organized Newton Theological Seminary. The College at the time was feeling severe economic pressure. No replacement for Professor Chase was appointed. Lists of students from that time on show no registrations in the theological department, although many in the College were destined for the ministry. No later attempt to establish a theological department ever had any permanent result.

Fig. 2 - Luther Rice (1783 - 1836), founder of the Columbian College. This is the only known likeness of Rice, cut by Emily Redd of Caroline Co., Va., prior to 1830.

Why did the theological department fold up, leaving the field almost exclusively to the liberal arts and sciences? To find the answer is not easy, especially since the denominational interest and involvement in the College was so marked. Some facts which may or may not have a bearing might be stated. The removal of Professor Chase to New England was due to a formal expression of northern Baptists that a theological seminary should be established in the vicinity of Boston. The Massachusetts Baptist Education Society selected Newton Center as the place. Maybe masters of convenience dictated the action, maybe there was some sectional feeling, maybe they did not relish the theological climate of Washington, maybe they were alarmed at the financial insecurity of the College. As a matter of fact, the costs of theological education, of the training of ministers in general, was an important factor in that insecurity. Candidates for the ministry rarely ever paid their way and financial assistance was frequently requested and invariably granted. Even before moving from Philadelphia, the Institution had accumulated a serious debt which was passed on to the College in turn. The institution at Newton did thrive. Certainly the removal of Professor Chase to Newton sounded the death knell for the theological department at Columbian.

The withering away of the theological department seems strange in light of the Baptists' desire to retain as close a denominational connection as was legally possible. The extent to which the charter was affected by the political and legal climate of the period is remarkable. Very briefly the situation was this. Funds had been raised and the College lot of 46½ acres just north of the Boundary, had been acquired for the Baptist Convention. A decision in a case involving the Philadelphia Baptist Convention held in 1819 "that an incorporated association could not receive and administer a fund for the training of young men for the Baptist ministry." In light of this decision, it was necessary that if the Baptist Convention was to hold funds and land for ministerial education, the Convention seek incorporation. An appeal to Congress for this purpose failed to produce results, because of opposition to anything suggesting a church-state relationship. The Convention was incorporated two years later under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania. Meanwhile renewed efforts were being made to get a charter from the Congress of the United States. These efforts produced a charter, but a charter for a college, not a religious body. In that charter all religious tests were strictly prohibited. The college would be nonsectarian.

A THOUSAND-YEAR LEASE.

The form of the charter was undoubtedly influenced by the decision in the Dartmouth College case (1819), which held that the College's charter could not be amended without the consent of the college trustees. The Columbian charter provided for the legislature's rights in giving Congress the right to revoke or amend, and requiring the trustees to furnish information concerning "their own conduct, the state of the institution, and of its finances" when required by either House of Congress. The Attorney General had the right at any time to inspect or examine.

Confronted with these legal requirements, how did the Baptist interests de facto to control an institution which de jure was nonsectarian? The land was transferred to the College for its use under a thousand year lease at an annual rental of one peppercorn, if demanded, the property to revert to the Convention if at any time more than one fourth of the Trustees were not selected from the official list, approved by the Convention. The method of election was, according to the charter, to be fixed by an ordinance of the Trustees. Since it was required that Trustees be elected by the contributors, a contributor was defined as an individual or group who had given at least a certain amount for denominational or educational purposes. Contributors were assigned additional votes for amounts given in excess of the minimum. These arrangements, needless to say, insured a majority of Baptist trustees on the governing body.

There was never any revolution of real moment against Baptist control; far from it. The College just evolved out of it.

When in 1826, after it had been in operation only five years, the College found itself deeply in debt, the Baptist Convention, as a precautionary move, stated that it was not responsible for the debts of the College and asked that the nomination of Trustees be put in other hands, the College requested the Convention to continue as before in nominating members of the Board. This was done as long as the Convention existed, but strong historical forces were to bring about the dissolution of the Convention within a score of years. Growing sectionalism and the sharpening of the slavery issue transformed the Convention into the Baptist Missionary Union, devoted solely and singly to the cause of missions, with the Southerners forming their own convention. As one of its last acts the Convention relinquished "all right, title and interest which they may have to the real estate or any other property" in the hands of the College. While any formal tie through property control by the Convention was now ended, the ordinances were not changed and Baptist organizations continued to seat a Baptist majority on the Board until 1865 when individual contributors were allowed to vote. Within a few years, the Board was made a self-perpetuating body, for the first time a layman was elected president of the University and an Episcopalian president of the Corporation. The hold of the denomination had been gradually relaxed by the force of circumstances and had now all but disappeared.

FINANCIAL AND THEOLOGICAL WOE S.

There was just one relapse. Hoping by the change to attract massive support from a wealthy Baptist philanthropist, sectarian control was established by charter revision from 1898 to 1904. Six years of complete frustration led to an enthusiastic resumption of the original charter. As logical as the progression to nonsectarian control seems, it is probably safe to say that, if at any time before 1904, large financial support from any Baptist sources had been tendered, that progression would have been interrupted.

POST WAR COLLEGE HILL

The buildings were war worn and life in them rugged. No funds were available for a complete renovation or rebuilding. The change in the city itself pointed the way mushroomed in size. The war had brought vast horde of civil servants and military to the city. There had been much new construction. The size of the governmental establishment did not shrink. New activities such as those of the Pension Bureau demanded tremendous staffs. These civil servants represented a new clientele for higher education. They found themselves in a newly expanded town which had not yet caught up with the amenities of a great city. Opportunities for amusement and cultural enrichment were conspicuously absent.

TURN OF THE CENTURY WASHINGTON.

They could lounge in the hotel lobbies at Willard’s, the Metropolitan or National and gape at the great in the world of politics, at Indian chiefs here to petition the Great White Father, or the picturesque characters that the city has never lacked. There were fine eating places like Harvey’s and famous saloons like 1234. But a fellow’s capacity, financial, gastronomic, and alcoholic, had limits. Those whose thirst was for self-improvement found an opportunity in the existence of a college coupled with the shortness of their working day. The Trustees, sensing the demand, organized experimentally a few after-hours courses on a self-supporting basis. The response was so gratifying, that they began to develop later classes for employed students. The part-time student became a major consideration in college planing. Many of these young men had caught the Washington fever and saw through the study of law the gateway to a political career of eminence and power.
The Law School was reopened in 1865.

THE MOVE FROM COLLEGE HILL.

The city had grown up to the college boundary. The institution was in dire financial straits. The plant was run down and there was no money for its wholesale renovation. Why not sell College Hill, take the money, build a plant in the heart of the city and in this convenient location build up the part-time student clientele which would use the same quarters used earlier for full-time students, and thus add vastly to revenue from tuition?

This philosophy was adopted. Gradually on H Street, between 13th and 15th Streets, all of the departments were located in newly built structures. What had been a resident college now became an urban university. For not only had the name Columbian College been changed to Columbian University, but the offerings of the University had been broadened to a true university scope. Unfortunately, however, H Street did not become the royal road to affluence. What was gained from the sale of College Hill fell woefully short of the cost of the new and ambitious construction downtown. The necessary demands for giving a wide variety of courses, many on a graduate level, prevented the profitable conduct of instruction that had been hopefully but sparsely expected.
Fig. 8 — The Law School of the Columbian University, where classes were held from 1865 to 1884.
When the massive burden of debt reached the limit of the University's credit, rapid and radical surgery was necessary to save a sinking patient. All but the Medical School property was sold and even a mortgage was placed on that to get the institution out of the red and ensure the restoration of the endowment. It was under the impact of that crisis that, excluding the medical department, the University in 1912 transferred all of its activities into a single building at 2023 G Street in the old, decaying First Ward. Slow and patient acquisition of property around that modest nucleus, and the development of a university plan, coupled with the growth of the city, the erection of large federal and private structures in the area, the creation and extension of parks along the river and the central location have placed the University in an area of great value and historic significance located on a multi-million dollar site. By happy circumstances the developing city has placed the University in a unique position, too easily realized to require description here.

Finally, financial elements have been involved in much that has been said about the first two great conditioning elements in the University's evolution — the church and the city. But something must be said, perhaps repeated, about finance as a conditioning factor. During more that the first century of its existence, the institution never had any money to grow on. It ran constantly into debt, it bailed itself out through herculean efforts only to get in debt again, with more bailing out. The reason why the institution passed out of its Baptist control was financial, not doctrinal. If Baptist money had been available at anytime during the nineteenth century to underwrite the institution the secularization of the University would certainly have been long postponed. The only operation that was ever fully funded in advance was the purchase of College Hill. The construction of its first buildings forced it to incur a heavy debt. It had to float a loan for operating expenses to begin its activities. But the dictates of fate were speaking the voice of poverty when College Hill was sold, and when the H Street property was disposed of.

In all of this change, the great continuing force has been a faculty which waited for its salary when it had to, which took partial pay when no more was available, which moved from College Hill to midtown, to Foggy Bottom, which included inspired teachers and which today participates in the good fortune which time has brought. The institution has always been in transition, and is today. Its long history of a century and a half has demonstrated its ability to adjust to meet today, and to remember yesterday as it girds itself for tomorrow.

Playing the hardest schedule ever attempted by a George Washington University eleven, the football team turned in a highly satisfactory record for the season, winning five of the nine games played and losing only to teams which are numbered among the most powerful aggregations in the East. Coach Crum issued a call for candidates during the first week in September, and the forty odd aspirants for berths on the eleven commenced a stiff two-week conditioning period at College Park. The Coach was greeted by eight familiar faces at the training camp, among them being HOTTEL, SAPP, and VIETHMEYER.

Sittin here half-dazed and under trying to think of words to say what needs saying. this is a book. it is mine i give it to you it is ours.
ensive November march on Washington which saw GW house a suffocating crush of people who slept in hallways, Lisner's chairs and fraternity houses.

But the killing in Vietnam did not stop, and our frustration gave way to apathy. A tranquil spring was violently shattered, however, as we were horrified by a government that had seemingly exhausted our capacity to express outrage. When the killing in Cambodia was brought home to sleepy college towns in Ohio and Mississippi, GW—and the nation's campuses—responded irrationally, perhaps, but swinging blindly because of the extent of our anger.

Once again thousands marched on Washington. The mood was uglier, though, and this time GW's central location was used for window-smashing forays into Northwest Washington. It ended with hundreds of riot police blanketing the campus with tear gas.

But protests had a seemingly counterproductive impact on foreign policymaking, and the following autumn saw many of us begin our senior year resigned to the war. A major demonstration was called for October 31, 1970. No one, save a few high schoolers and curiosity seekers, bothered to show up. And the killing in Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos continues.

G Street can be nostalgic. Granted, D.C. Transit pollutes it, potholes scar it, and architectural monstrosities blight it. But G Street was—before the days of a massive yet unembracing University Center—our gathering point. It guided us to classes, the Old Union, Leo's... it watched us watch us.

While we marched in vain for changes that were never made, GW was drastically altered during our time here, and G Street perhaps best mirrored that transition. It wasn’t the obvious physical changes: the fraternity houses that were once overflowing that now are empty or demolished. The real change on G Street is the people who walk on it. We dress differently. Our eyes have aged. We seem closer.

It was dope but it really wasn’t just dope. It was realizing that there was more to Washington than G.W. It was being with someone close and talking. It was cutting classes because the Mall was so green. It was wearing old jeans and an undershirt to see an advisor. It was smiling when there was nothing to smile about.

It was that one professor who inspired you to think and create. It was exploring a subject because it was a fascination—not a vehicle that will bring a higher yearly income after graduation. It was sitting up all night learning from others. And, yes, it was dope—reaching out, grasping and expanding.

But for all the warm memories, there are bitter ones, and G Street has a way of flaunting itself at you when you strip away the nostalgia. Aside from those obvious physical defects, G Street is classrooms that offered such high expectations that were never fulfilled: for every professor who inspired us, there were so many more who stifled us.
It was a library that was inadequate, parking lots that never seemed to be operated efficiently, and that little sandwich shop where bigots gathered at night to swap venom.

Crucial university policy was set for us every month in a meeting room high above G Street by an all-faculty body that remained rigidly exclusionary. And the once-dingy, cramped union, now deserted, is a nagging reminder that there never was student unity at GW. Apathy was discussed so much that the concept, as well as the word, became a cliché.
And now much of G Street is echoes. It has lost many of its students to 21st St.’s crypt. It surrendered fraternity houses for parking lots, and will soon lose its library for a better version on H Street.

What it leaves for us is a familiarity—we got to know G Street, to feel secure walking aimlessly down it—to accept it as an integral part of our womb. And its bitter memories will undoubtedly fade and succumb to romantic nostalgia—except perhaps when our children ask us, puzzled, why our memories are so fond of a period when the nation was at war.

Honor America Day
July 4 1970

"...this great anniversary festival ought to be commemorated as the day of deliverance, by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty. It ought to be solemnized with pomp and parade, with shows, games, sports..."

JOHN ADAMS

I Gotta get me a Motorcycle!

You wanna buy a bike for $100. How about this Monza here?

Wow! I want a Chopper!

Well, this Harley 7A belonged to a little old outlaw biker who only used it to drive back and forth to his lawyer's.

Here, Leroy, and see if you can start this fine piece of machinery for this here gentleman!

Easy Rider

PETE PONDUS

Fifty-eight Ka-chuff's later:

Chug Chug Chug Chug Chug Chug

... back here's the gearshift knob...

1, 2, 3...

Down here's the clutch pedal...

Take it on out for a little spin!

Thunder

... Clutch in...

Shift to third...

... Downshift into low...

... Clutch out...

... Break on...

... Vrum...

... Clutch in...

... Clutch out...

Well, it stops all right?

... I can't get it into neutral. That means I can't take my foot off the clutch pedal without landing forward into traffic!

Oh no! There's a red light up ahead!

Oo o o o...

... I can't stop the bike from falling over to the left if it should want to...

ARGHHHHHHHHHHH!!

Shriek! Scream!

Hells! Wail!

What a got, Fat Freddy?

A mo-ped! I got it for $25 and I'm gonna make a Chopper out of it!
