The U.S. and Russian Interventions in Syria:
Room for Cooperation or Prelude to Greater Conflict?

with

Yoshiko Herrera
Professor of Political Science, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Andrew Kydd
Professor of Political Science, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Fyodor Lukyanov (by Skype)
Editor-in-Chief, Russia in Global Affairs, and Chairman, Council on Foreign and Defense Policy, Russia

Introduction by:
Timothy Colton
Morris and Anna Feldberg Professor of Government and Russian Studies, and Chair, Department of Government, Harvard University

Moderated by:
Cory Welt
Associate Research Professor of International Affairs and co-Director, PONARS Eurasia

U.S.-Russia bilateral relations, already strained, have worsened since the beginning of the Ukrainian crisis in 2013. The fact that both countries are conducting military operations in Syria poses serious dangers. This could, however, also create new opportunities for cooperation. Despite disagreements over the means, both Russia and the United States have come to believe that salvaging Syria is a key to future development of the Middle East. The United States and Russia now share more common ground on the Syrian question than before. Please join us at the Elliott School of International Affairs for the launch of the fifth paper of the Working Group on the Future of U.S.-Russia Relations, which focuses on the ways in which the United States and Russia could exploit the possibility of coordinating their Syrian strategies to better the chances of a decent outcome in Syria, and to improve the bilateral relationship.

Thursday, January 28, 2016
9:30 - 11:00 am
Room 505, Fifth Floor
1957 E St NW

Please RSVP at http://go.gwu.edu/2zb
This event is on the record.