Marion Fourcade
University of California, Berkeley

Marion Fourcade is a professor of Sociology at UC Berkeley who studies economic and political knowledge and practice across nations. Her first book, Economists and Societies (Princeton University Press 2009), explored the distinctive character of economics profession in three countries. She is currently at work on a second book, tentatively called Measure for Measure: Social Ontologies of Classification, which examines national classificatory styles in areas including environmental valuation, the digitization of books, and the classification of wines in France and the United States. Other ongoing research focuses on the moral underpinnings and consequences of economic processes and technologies; the role of credit in social stratification, the comparative study of political organization, the microsociology of courtroom exchanges, and the role of business schools in the neoliberal turn. Prof. Fourcade received her PhD from Harvard, held visiting positions at Princeton and New York University, and was previously co-director of the Max Planck Sciences-Po Center on Coping with Instability in Market Societies.

A copy of Dr. Fourcade’s paper will be made available to those who RSVP.
