Turkey has made the headlines recently for a number of issues, including accusations of corruption, controversial changes to the judiciary, restrictions on internet privacy, economic troubles, and protests against the ruling Justice and Development Party (AKP). Join our esteemed panelists in a discussion on Turkey’s shifting political dynamic and its implications for the country and its region.

Joshua D. Hendrick is assistant professor of sociology at Loyola University and author of the book Gülen: The Ambiguous Politics of Market Islam in Turkey and the World. Ihsan Dagi is visiting scholar at SAIS and associate professor of international relations at the Middle East Technical University in Ankara. Bayram Balci is a visiting scholar at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace's Middle East Program.