Seven Challenges Facing the Russian Protest Movement
Part of IERES’s Visiting Scholar Roundtable Series

with

Oleg Kozlovsky
Fulbright Visiting Researcher, IERES

In this talk, Oleg Kozlovsky will describe some of the tests facing the Russian protest movement in 2013. These include balancing between moderates and radicals, dealing with regime defectors, reducing the influence of extremists, institutionalizing the movement, broadening its appeal to a wider public, encouraging citizens to play a more active role in politics, and developing support in the regions outside of Moscow and St. Petersburg.

Oleg Kozlovsky is a Fulbright Visiting Researcher and is at IERES to work on his dissertation, which examines the influence of Ukraine’s Orange Revolution on Russian political life. His academic interests include non-violent political resistance movements, democratic revolutions, as well as use of new media for advancing freedom and democracy. Oleg is known in Russia as a civil rights activist, change agent, and blogger.

Wednesday, March 27, 2013
4:00 – 5:00 pm
Voesear Conference Room
1957 E Street NW, Suite 412
Please RSVP at http://go.gwu.edu/Kozlovsky

This event is on the record