Rafaela Dancygier is Assistant Professor of Politics at Princeton University. Her research has examined the domestic consequences of international immigration, the political incorporation and electoral representation of immigrant-origin minorities, and the determinants of ethnic conflict. Her book Immigration and Conflict in Europe (Cambridge University Press, August 2010) explains how immigration regimes and local political economies determine whether or not immigration destinations witness conflict between immigrants and natives, between immigrants and the state, or no conflict at all. Her other work has appeared or is forthcoming in the American Journal of Political Science, the Journal of Politics, Comparative Politics, World Politics and in edited volumes. Professor Dancygier received her PhD from Yale University.
