After coming to power in the Rose Revolution of November 2003, Georgian President Mikhail Saakashvili sought to move away from the divisive ethnic nationalism of the past and integrate Georgia’s Armenian and Azerbaijani minorities within the framework of a civic nationalism. But what did integration entail? And were Georgians ready to accept integrated Armenians and Azerbaijanis as equals? This presentation will address these questions, using findings from interviews and data from a socio-linguistic experiment.

Christofer Berglund is a Ph.D. Candidate at the Department of Government, Uppsala University, affiliated with the Uppsala Centre for Russian and Eurasian Studies (UCRS). His research interests revolve around issues of democratization and ethno-politics, with a focus on the South Caucasus. He has published articles for the Central Asia-Caucasus Analyst and Nordisk Østforum, and contributed with book chapters to edited volumes, such as The Handbook of Political Change in Eastern Europe (2013).

Thursday, May 8, 2014
4:00 – 5:00 pm
Voesar Conference Room
1957 E Street NW, Suite 412
Please RSVP at http://go.gwu.edu/Berglund

This event is on the record.