IERES • THE INSTITUTE FOR EUROPEAN, RUSSIAN AND EURASIAN STUDIES

Setting the Boundaries of Legitimacy in Post-Authoritarian Democracies: Evidence from Post-War Italy
Part of IERES’ European Politics Series with

Giovanni Capoccia
Professor of Comparative Politics, Corpus Christi College

Prof. Capoccia's research focuses on the comparative study of democracy and democratization, the analysis of political institutions, European politics, and the theory and methodology of comparative research. He is the author of Defending Democracy (Johns Hopkins University Press 2005, paperback 2007) and co-editor of “The Historical Turn in Democratization Studies” (Comparative Political Studies, Aug-Sept 2010). His current project, Reshaping Democracy after Authoritarianism, addresses the question of why contemporary European democracies adopt different policy responses to extremist dissent. The recipient of numerous paper and book awards, Capoccia has held a British Academy/Leverhulme Trust Senior Research Fellowship and in 2006-2007 was the Rita E. Hauser Fellow at the Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Study, Harvard University. His research has been funded by the British Academy, the German Foundation for Academic Exchanges, the Nuffield Foundation, and other organizations. He is a faculty associate of the Oxford Centre for the Study of Inequality and Democracy.

A copy of Prof. Capoccia’s paper will be made available to those who RSVP.
