Reporting from Russia: A Firsthand Account
Part of IERES’ Behind the Headlines Series with

Julia Ioffe
The New Republic

When I first arrived in Moscow, in September 2009, I expected to hate it, as any good child of Soviet refugees would. I also expected it to be the wildest, most exciting place to cover as a journalist. In three years, I found out that neither prediction came to pass.

Julia Ioffe is a staff writer at The New Republic, which she joined after three years of covering Russia for Foreign Policy and The New Yorker. Ioffe was born in Moscow and emigrated with her family in 1990. She studied Soviet history at Princeton University.

Wednesday, October 24, 2012
4:00 – 5:00 pm
Voesar Conference Room
1957 E Street NW, Suite 412
Please RSVP at http://go.gwu.edu/ioffe

This event is on the record