Belarus: A Look at Europe's Last Dictatorship

with

Dr. Mitchell A. Orenstein

Dr. Orenstein currently teaches at the Paul H. Nitze School of Advanced International Studies at Johns Hopkins University. Before becoming Associate Professor of European Studies at SAIS, Dr. Orenstein served as former director of Daniel Patrick Moynihan European Research Centers at Maxwell School of Citizenship, Public Affairs at Syracuse University and taught political science and public administration at Brown, Yale and Moscow State universities. Dr. Orenstein's work focuses on the international political economy of policy reform, exploring the ways that democratic polities seek to adapt and adjust to pressures of economic globalization and liberal economic reforms. His research has concentrated on the global spread of pension privatization, Central and East European economic transitions, and strategies of democratization.
