China, Russia, and the Existing World Order: Seeking to Overthrow the Status Quo or Merely Pursuing Advantage within It?

Panel 1:

Muslim Administration in Non-Arab Peripheries: Russia, China, India, and Turkey
Kimitaka Matsuzato Hokkaido University

The world is de-secularizing. Today’s religious revival grew out of religion’s public function, not its appeal for personal faith. In contrast to Catholicism and Orthodoxy, Islam does not request a definite organizational structure of congregation, and is able to adapt itself to any political regime. In other words, comparing Muslim administration in these four countries has more significance than a mere minority study. Through this prism we may identify fundamental features of the four political regimes.

Kimitaka Matsuzato is a Professor at the Slavic Research Center, Hokkaido University. He earned a Doctor of Law at Tokyo University in 1996. He specializes in the modern history and politics of post-Soviet countries and has recently focused on the Black Sea Rim, religious politics, and semi-presidentialism.

The Power and Limitations of Dominant Party Control: United Russia, the Chinese Communist Party, and the Indian Congress in Comparative Perspective
Atsushi Ogushi, Osaka University of Law and Economics, and Yuko Adachi, Sophia University

Conventional wisdom states that political parties are essential for making a political order. In regional powers with a huge territory, massive population, diverse ethnic groups, rapidly growing economies and swiftly changing social conditions, dominant parties have been a useful mechanism for containing the centrifugal forces. We will discuss the functions of dominant parties in Eurasia and their limitations.

Atsushi Ogushi is an associate professor at Osaka University of Law and Economics. He holds a PhD in Politics from Glasgow University (2005) and specializes in Russian/Soviet politics. His recent publications include The Demise of the Soviet Communist Party (Routledge, 2008); “From the CC CPSU to the Russian Presidency” (Sapporo: Slavic Research Center, 2009), among others.

Yuko Adachi is an Associate Professor in the Department of Russian Studies, Sophia University, Japan. She holds a Ph.D. from the School of Slavonic and East European Studies (SSEES), University College London (UCL), and a M.A. from the School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS), Johns Hopkins University. Her research interests include business-government relations in Russia, and she recently published a book entitled Building Big Business in Russia (Routledge, 2010).

Discussants: Marlene Laruelle, IERES, and Deepa Ollapally, Sigur Center

Panel 2
Growth in the International Reserves of Russia, China, and India:
Implications for the World Economic System
Shinichiro Tabata, Hokkaido University

Major regional powers in Eurasia, i.e. Russia, China, and India, accumulated substantial foreign reserves during the 2000s, which has led to the revival of the Bretton Woods international monetary system. Although the costs of this accumulation are enormous, there is a fair possibility that this system will continue in the near future.

Shinichiro Tabata is a Professor at the Slavic Research Center, Hokkaido University. He specializes in the Russian economy, its energy policy and the Far Eastern economy. He is the chief project leader for “Comparative Research on Major Regional Powers in Eurasia.”

Comparison of Trade Liberalizations in Russia, China and India
Yugo Konno, Mizuho Research Institute Ltd.

Russia, China and India all introduced a broad trade liberalization at the beginning of the 1990s. However, the paces of reform differed considerably from one country to the next. This study will compare the trade liberalizations in the three countries through an analysis of trade performances.

Yugo Konno is Senior Economist at Mizuho Research Institute Ltd. He earned a PhD from Hokkaido University in 2008 and specializes in the international economic relations of Russia and the CIS countries.

Discussant: Jiawen Yang, GW Business School

Monday, November 21, 2011
3:00-6:00pm
Lindner Family Commons
1957 E Street NW, Room 602

Please RSVP at go.gwu.edu/PanelNov21

This event is co-sponsored by the Sigur Center for Asian Studies

This event is on the record