Conservative Political Parties and the Challenge of Democratization: Lessons from Europe's Historical Experience

Part of IERES' European Politics Series

with

Daniel Ziblatt

Professor of Government, Harvard University

Professor Ziblatt is the author of Structuring the State: The Formation of Italy, Germany, and the Puzzle of Federalism (Princeton University Press, 2006), which was awarded several prizes including the American Political Science Association's 2007 award for Best Book in European Politics. He is co-editor of a 2010 special double issue of Comparative Political Studies entitled "The Historical Turn in Democratization Studies" and is currently writing a book titled Conservative Political Parties and the Birth of Modern Democracy in Europe, 1848-1950 that offers a new interpretation of the historical democratization of Europe. His recent papers have received APSA's Luebbert Prize (2009) for best published comparative politics paper, APSA's Sage Prize (2008) for best comparative paper presented, and two article prizes from the Comparative Democratization Section of APSA (2010). Ziblatt has been visiting professor and fellow at the École Normal Supérieure (Paris, France), the Max Planck Institute (Cologne, Germany), and the University of Konstanz (Germany).

Paper available upon request.
