U.S.-Russia Relations in Post-Soviet Eurasia: Transcending the Zero-Sum Game

Chair:
Cory Welt
Associate Director, IERES

Introductory remarks and moderation:
Timothy Colton
Chair, Department of Government, Harvard University

Presentation by:
Samuel Charap
Director for Russia and Eurasia, Center for American Progress

Mikhail Troitskiy
Adjunct Professor, Moscow State Institute of International Relations

Despite the successes of the “reset” in U.S.-Russia ties, this key bilateral relationship remains fraught. This event will mark the publication of the first report of a newly formed Track II initiative dedicated to the future of U.S.-Russia relations. The report, “U.S.-Russia Relations in Post-Soviet Eurasia: Transcending the Zero-Sum Game,” was coauthored by Samuel Charap and Mikhail Troitskiy, both members of the Working Group on the Future of U.S.-Russia Relations. It is the first study to examine in detail how the U.S.’ and Russia’s ties with the countries of post-Soviet Eurasia affect the bilateral relationship. The study identifies key sources of U.S.-Russia tensions in the region and recommends specific measures to facilitate improvement.

Friday, September 16, 2011
12:00-1:30 p.m.
Lindner Family Commons
1957 E St, NW, 6th floor
RSVP at http://tinyurl.com/PONARS91611.